On September 28th, the Black Student Union held a Candlelight Vigil to discuss the injustices, racism, and discrimination at Fredonia and around the country. The theme was "Black Lives Matter" and the need for change.

Within the Black Lives Matter movement, there has also been some hush hush about the black transgender and non-binary lives that have been kept silent since the movement rose. Rae’Lynn Thomas was murdered by her ex-boyfriend. But she is just one story of many. Although her murder was not related to police violence, her story must be told to spread awareness of the discrimination being faced within just one of many intersectional identities in the black community.
Please join Pride Alliance at their Opening Ceremony!
They will be co-sponsoring this event with Women’s Student Union and the Women’s and Gender Studies Program for the 20th Annual Fall Gathering. Chase Joynt, a moving-image artist, and Vivek Shraya, a singer-songwriter, short story writer, and visual artist stop by Fredonia on their tour to feature their publications, and discuss gender, race, and transition.

This event will take place on Monday, October 3rd, at 3 PM in the Horizon Room in the Williams Center. We hope to see you there!
Queer History Month: Looking Back
By Shaun Feerick

Queer History Month is observed in October, and here in Fredonia, it contains some of Pride Alliance’s most popular events, such as the Drag Show and National Coming Out Day. While Equality Forum, a non-profit organization focused on awareness and initiatives, and other organizations involved refer to October commemorations as LGBT History Month. Pride Alliance has used Queer History Month since 2014, citing "queer" as more inclusive in nature than even an expanded acronym. Queer History Month, or LGBT+ History Month, can be easily confused with Pride Month, but the two actually have distinct functions.

Pride Month in June draws attention to LGBT+ activism and politics while bringing LGBT+ people together in public spaces. Pride month, and the idea of Pride in the United States, is also inseparably tied to the Stonewall riots—the first Pride celebration is considered to be Christopher Street Liberation Day, which was coordinated by Brenda Howard and was first held on the one-year anniversary of the riots. Whereas June is a time for organization and public demonstration, October has more of an educational focus.

Rodney Wilson, a Missouri high school teacher, is credited for the original idea of adding LGBT+ History Month, but it was the efforts of many educators and community leaders that turned it into a nationwide observance. The month was specifically selected to fall within the school year, and October was chosen because Coming Out Day and other observances already took place in October. LGBT+ History Month focuses on education about prominent lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, and queer historical figures. Since 2006, Equality Forum has provided content and educational guidance for LGBT+ History Month, selecting 31 historical figures to highlight each year, one for each day in October. Equality Forum also coordinates a national and international LGBT+ civil rights conference.

The characteristics used to determine who qualifies as a "queer historical figure" helps to illustrate the vast difference in intentions between Pride Month and Queer History Month. For example, this year James Buchanan, fifteenth President of the United States, was selected as one of the 31 historical figures. (All James Buchanan fans in the audience mark your calendars for October 8th.) Buchanan made negligible contributions to the LGBT+ movement, of course, but his love for other men is accepted or at least speculated about by a great number of historians. Whereas the idea of Pride is tied with activist movements for queer rights and liberation, Queer History Month directs our attention to important figures in history who were queer. (Of course, many of the historical figures celebrated on the LGBT+ History Month website were activists or prominent figures in the LGBT+ rights movement.)

Why is Queer History Month necessary, especially considering Pride Month was already being celebrated? Queer History Month and the groups that promote it are focused on bringing education about LGBT+ people to schools. LGBT+ people are somewhat unique in that they usually can't learn about their history from their families, and in fact, often have to hide their identities from their families. The HIV/AIDS crisis further separated LGBT+ youth from their pasts and made history more difficult to access; many of our elders who would otherwise be here to tell their stories were lost in the AIDS crisis. Access to history is access to a sense of identity that traces back centuries. People, especially within marginalized groups, can better deal with the problems in their lives if they have access to the role models that history can provide. History can give young people an idea of their futures; it can teach them how people like them have overcome hardship before. Finally, teaching a shared history of LGBT+ people emphasizes that we are not a scattered group of medical anomalies who pop up by chance. We are a community. Individuals can't do much in the realm of politics and civil rights; communities can do almost anything.
